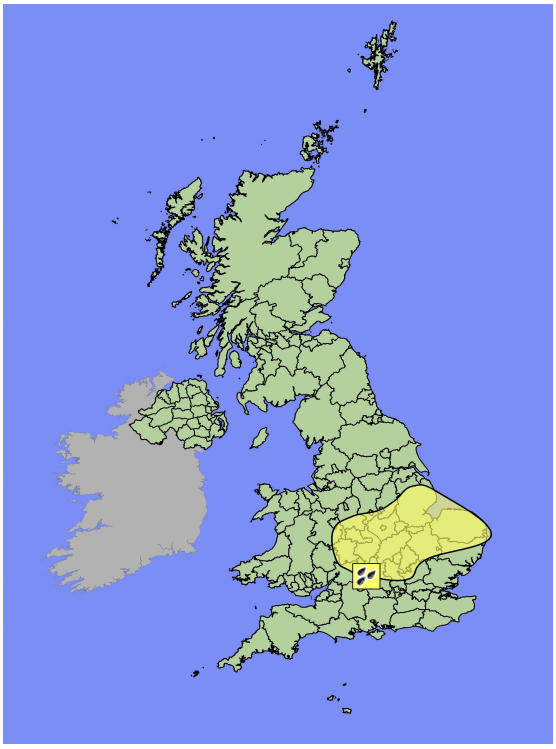
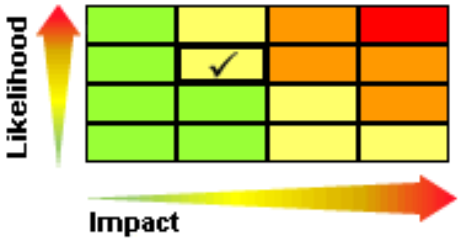
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
There remains a fair amount of uncertainty as to exact developments into Tuesday morning. However, the expectation is that an upper trough will cause de-stabilisation of the moist airmass in residence across southern Britain, causing some heavy, potentially thundery, rainfall to break out. Amounts of rainfall could exceed 20 to 30 mm, with a few places perhaps receiving amounts in the region of 50 mm. With the ground generally wet, some surface water issues seem likely to result. Adjustments may be made to the area judged most at risk, with latest indications perhaps focusing on the eastern section of the warning area, i.e. the East Midlands and parts of East Anglia.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 06:00 on Tue, 10th Jul 2012 until 20:00 on Tue, 10th Jul 2012

Heavy rain, with isolated thunderstorms, is expected to break out later on Monday night and for a time on Tuesday morning. The more persistent rain should be succeeded by scattered heavy showers by Tuesday afternoon.

The public should be aware that large amounts of rainfall through parts of this area may bring a risk of surface water flooding, as well as general difficult driving conditions.
